WEDNESDAY EVENING, FEB. 10, 1904. THE RUSSIAN STANDPOINT.

A lengthy official communication issued yesterday in St. Petersburg gives the Russian account of the negotiations which led to the rupture.
"Last year," says this foreign office note, "the Tokio cabinet under the pretext of establishing the balance of power and a more settled order of things on the shores of the Pacific, submitted to the imperial government a proposal for a re-vision of the existing treaties with Korea. Russia consented and Viceroy Alexieft Russia consented and Viceroy Alexiefl was charged to draw up a project for a new understanding with Japan in cooperation with the Russian Minister at Tokio, who was entrusted with the negotiations with the Japanese government.

"Although the exchange of views with the Tokio cabinet on the subject was of a friendly character, Japanese social circles and the local and foreign press attemated in every way to produce a wartempted in every way to produce a war-like ferment among the Japanese and to drive the government into an armed con-flict with Russia. Under the influence thereof the Tokio cabinet began to formulate greater and greater demands in the negotiations, at the same time taking nost extensive measures to make the country raidy for war.

"All these circumstances could not, of course, disturb Russia's equanimity, but they induced her also to take military and naval measures. Nevertheless, to preserve peace in the far East, Russia, so far as her incontestable rights and interests perher incontestable rights and interests permited, gave the necessary attention to the demands of the Toiko cabinent and declared herself ready to recognize Japan's privileged commercial and economic position in the Korean peninsula, with the concession of the right to protect it by military force in the event of distables are in the contest of the disturbances in that country. At the same time, while rigoroously observing the fundamental principle of her policy regarding Korea, whose independence and integrity were guaranteed by pre-vious understandings with Japan and by treaties with other powers, Russia insisted on three points:

"One—On a mutual and unconditional guarantee of this principle. Two-On an undertaking to use no part of Korea for strategic purposes, as the authorization of such action on the part of any foreign power was directly opposed to the principle of the inddepenlence of Kores. "Three-On the preservation of the full freedom of navigation of the straits of Korea.

"The project elaborated in this sense did not satisfy the Japanese government, which, in its last proposals, not only declined to accept the conditions which appeared as the guarantee of the independence of Korea, but also began at the same time to insist on provisions to be incorposated in a praiset program to the other constants. fills a most important place in the essentials of a fine Christmas dinner, as your cook will fail if the fire is not right. It will be right, however, if you buy the coal of us. Our coal is the best for any kind of cooking. It gives just the right fire always. porated in a project regarding the question of Manchuria. Such damands on the part of Japan, naturally were inadmissible, the question of Russia's position missible, the question of Kussia's position in Manchuria, concerning in the first place China, but also all the powers having commercial interests in China.

"The imperial government, therefore, saw absolutely no reason to include in a special treaty with Japan regarding Komercial China and Chin rean affairs, any provisions concerning territory occupied by Russian troops. The imperial government, however, did not refuse, so long as the occupation of Manchuria lasts, to recognize both the sovereignity of the Emperor of China in Manchuria territory. churia and also the rights acquired there by the other powers through treaties with China. A declaration to this effect had already been made to the foreign cabinets.

"In view of this the imperial government, after charging its representative at Tokio to present its reply to the last KING STREET (our former loca-tion), where all orders received for pecting the Toxio cabinet to take into account the considerations set forth above and that it would appreciate the wish manifested by Russia to come to a peaceful understanding with Japan. Instead of this the Japanese governmen even awaiting this reply, decided to break off negotiations and to suspend diplomatic relations.

"The imperial government, while lay-ing on Japan the full responsibility for any consequences of such a course of action, will await the development of events and the moment it becomes necessary will take the most decisive measures for the protection of its rights and inter-ests in the far East."
